Black Teas >> Darjeeling, Assam, Nepal

Teas from the northern edge of the Indian continent are incredibly varied and unique. Darjeeling teas, often called the Champagne of teas, are bright, floral, and dry. Black Teas >> Popular Blends

Selected premium black tea blends offer teas that are less dependent on the seasonal variations that affect estate teas. Our blends usually contain 6 to 10 component teas, compared to a typical "grocery store" tea which may be blended from as many as 40 components. This structure creates blends with more distinct flavor profiles, but also means they can change, or disappear, from year to year as the component teas change.

T-sacs, Infusers, Tools >> Timers & Thermometers

Getting the right infusion time and the right water temperature are just as important as measuring the tea correctly. Too little time and the tea will taste like water. Too much time and the tea will be very bitter. Each tea comes with a recommended infusion time range. Start at the middle and adjust to your taste. Likewise water below boiling will not yield the full flavor of a black tea, while boiling water can destroy an oolong, green, or white tea. Follow the recommendations for each tea carefully. Many people who believe they don't like green teas have never really had a cup that was properly prepared!
